The earliest complete clock of which an accurate record exists was made in the thirteenth century by a Saracen mechanic.

"Oh, no, a Yale man would never do that."

Dr. Dixwell has decided to offer a reward for the vandals. He says that he will make it his mission in life to find them.

New Haven has always been proud of the regicides. Whalley, Goffe, and Dixwell. All three lived here after trying Charles I. ascended the English throne. Whalley and Goffe were pursued here, and a couple of English commissioners, Kellond and Kirk, were sent after them. The regicides dodged their pursuers by hiding in what has since been called "Judges' Cave, in West Rock. It will be remembered that both later left New Haven and went to Hadley, Mass., where they died. After the death of Whalley, Goffe, then an old man, emerged from his hiding place and led the Hadley settlers in a sally when the town was attacked by the Indians.

Dixwell's coming to New Haven was entirely independent of the visit of Whalley and Goffs. Charles II. thought that Dixwell was in Switzerland and never looked for him in America. Dixwell arrived here in 1870, ten years after the accession of Charles II. and the flight from England of the Judges. His identity was kept concasted and he found a home with Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Ling, who lived on the site of the present Sheffield Scientific School buildings. In 1673 Ling died, leaving in his will a charge to Judge Dixwell to "assist and take care of his wife," and he "recommended her to be kind to Judge Dixwell to "assist and take care of his wife," and he "recommended her to be kind to Judge Dixwell to "assist and take care of his wife," and he "recommended her to be kind to Judge Dixwell to "assist and take care of his wife," and he "recommended her to be kind to Judge Dixwell to "have the marriage, leaving the Judge a property of 2900. In 1677 Judge Dixwell, then 70 years old, married Miss Bathsheba Howe, a young woman who esided in New Haven, Three children Whether the machetes that form a part of the cargo of the steamship Cearense of the Brazilian Red Cross line, now lying at her dock in Brooklyn, are agricultural implements or imples ments of war, is a question which is troubling the local customs authorities. Collector Bids that the vessel has on board contraband of war, namely the machetes, but the agents of the line insist that they are merely agricultural implements which were made by a Connecticut firm ments which were made by a Connecticut firm for shipment to a port in South America, where they will be used for cutting sugar cane.

In Cuba the same sort of knives were used for cutting down sugar cane, but since the revolution they have been more popular for cutting down men. That is why the customs authorities are in doubt. The remainder of the vessel's cargo is of various sorts of agricultural implements. The Collector has detailed Inspector Traitteur to investigate and report.

A Tuesday that will have become a Monday.

Your enjoyment of the holiday may be all the greater if you reflect on the opulent offers we have made ready for Tuesday; a day that will dwarf other Mondays. The old proverb that "anticipation is greater than realization" has an exception in this store's showing. Our news is not exaggeration; we only use the practical power of sincerity, every statement advises the store's worth, and every article of merchandise sold indorses the statement. Your eye may run approvingly over brief descriptions and prices, but actual participation in the advantages offered is a realization which exceeds anticipation.
